

Colt's

"More than anything else, Colt loved to hit the ball. Even before he was walking or standing up, he would sit down and hit a ball with the bat, then crawl to wherever he hit the ball to, and do it all over again. Once he was standing up good, he started hitting the ball off a tee. Once he was walking, he would hit the ball off the tee, then run in a circle as if he was running the bases. It wasn't long after he started walking that we were pitching the ball to Colt for him to hit it. I guess the tee was too easy. Just like the tee, once he hit the pitched ball, he would drop the bat and run in a circle. He could do this for hours. He even hit his bat on the ground before he lifted it up."
